

same way. Players must equally take turns to act as Question Master within their team.

WINNING:

When a team answers a question and there are no more spaces matching that colour remaining on the board, they move their playing piece onto the centre space. The team continues to play the rest of the questions on the card. If they get one right they win, otherwise the opposing team take their next turn and can go on to win if they reach the centre then answer a question correctly.

A team can win by getting a question right that is passed to them during their opponents' turn.

that of the question itself. A wrong answer or pass means any player from the Question Master's own team has the opportunity to answer the question for a bonus, enabling them to move their team's piece in the same way.

The Question Master asks the second, third and fourth questions in the same way, with each correct answer resulting in a move onto the next space on the board matching the colour of the question asked. After a card has been completed it is placed to the bottom of the pack and a player from the opposing team becomes the new Question Master and plays the next card in the question side downwards. Split the players into two teams (one team may have an extra player). Each team takes a playing piece and places it on the starting space on the board next to the other.

PLAY:

A player from the team containing the youngest player becomes the first Question Master, and picks up the first card from the pile and reads out the first question to the opposing team. The question side of the card must not be shown to any other player on either team.

A correct answer means the opposing team moves their piece onto the next coloured space matching
